

New Academic Appointment
Lecturer in Electronic Engineering

Salary range from
Grade 7 £36,424- £39,523 per annum

(Inclusive of London Allowance)

The Department of Electronic and Electrical Engineering at UCL is recognised as one of the leading Departments for research in its subject area, worldwide. The Department wishes appoint a fixed term Lecturer in Electronic Engineering to cover the absence of a member of staff, who has been awarded a Royal Academy of Engineering / The Leverhulme Trust Senior Research Fellowship for 2014/15. The appointment is a fixed-term position for one year and must start no later than 1st October 2014, however it is anticipated that the successful candidate would be in place by the start of the First Term 2014, beginning Monday 22nd September 2014.

For this appointment we particularly seek candidates with research experience in optical communications and digital signal processing whose research is either within or complementary to our existing research activities in the Optical Networks Group. We would expect the candidate to contribute to a range of teaching within the department and the faculty including but not limited to teaching optical communications at MSc level and engineering mathematics at undergraduate level.

Applicants should have a record of carrying out internationally leading research and an outstanding publications record. The ability to inspire students and research staff to achieve their full potential is also of great importance to us.

Informal enquiries regarding the post can be made to Dr Seb Savory on s.savory@ucl.ac.uk
